

COMPENSATION CULTURE – OUR VIEW

A lot has been written and said about Britain's "compensation culture" in recent times.

We believe that individuals should be fully aware of their right to claim compensation if they have been injured in an accident and someone else is to blame. We think those claims should be pursued by lawyers with specialist expertise.

However, many have attempted to pursue claims that have little merit or little prospect of success in the hope that an Insurer will pay out nevertheless to get rid of a claim. We do not support such speculative claims. We are committed to devoting our time and resources to acting for those clients with genuine claims. They should be pursued with vigour and the injured client is entitled to rely on the experience and expertise of the person dealing with their claim. We think it is wrong to raise false hopes of recovering compensation in cases which are never likely to succeed.

We will give you straightforward frank and fair advice from the outset in respect of any claim that you are contemplating bringing. If we do not think it is worth pursuing your claim we will tell you. If you have a claim which should be pursued, we will advise you in clear terms and act for you so as to maximise your compensation and obtain it as quickly as possible.
